The fiction, poetry, essays, creative nonfiction, lists, journal entries, and articles collected in Higher Learning: Reading and Writing About College allow students to read, discuss, write, and think critically about the culturally and historically diverse traditions and perspectives of university life. This collection allows readers to discover people just like them, as well as people sometimes so different from them to be almost, at least at first, unimaginable. Significant changes in this third edition include eighteen new, diverse readings, three research papers on timely topics, 21 student-written pieces, nearly twenty “First Generation” authors, examples of class-tested writing assignments, and student responses to readings.
