Study abroad programs targeting the learning of a language in an immersive environment may actually be more isolative than immersive. In this article, we propose an innovative way of dealing with this problem. Through tasks, students are encouraged to engage with the host culture and host language. Students not only improve proficiency in the language, but also develop greater cultural understanding.