McIntyre Library could not function without the work of student employees. Library faculty and staff have long valued the contributions of our student employees, but only recently have we begun exploring the value to students of working in the library. A survey of 92 student employees who have worked at McIntyre over the past five years was recently conducted, and the preliminary results provide some interesting insights.

When asked what skills students learned or developed while working at McIntyre Library, the top responses were attention to detail, customer service, the ability to work independently, and research skills. These were followed by communication, interpersonal, and organizational skills.

When asked how they refer to their library work experience in subsequent job or internship interviews, respondents cited several of the aforementioned skills. Others provided examples of how their work in the library helped them learn about workplace etiquette, such as getting along with a variety of colleagues and supervisors, and developing a sense of professionalism. Additionally, several talked about the opportunities they had to obtain supervisory and problem-solving experience. “I got to choose how I accomplished things, if there was more than one way to do the task,” wrote one respondent. Some respondents, particularly those pursuing careers in librarianship, reflected on the value of gaining library-related knowledge and skills.

This brought us to another point we were interested in. We have long suspected, as have others on campus who employ students, that the student work experience often influences a student’s future career path. We asked survey respondents if they had enrolled in, or ever considered enrolling in, a graduate program in library science. We then asked those who responded affirmatively (59%) if they had been thinking about it before working at McIntyre Library. Fifty-eight percent responded no.

This data suggests that the library student work experience plays a role in directing student employees toward a career in librarianship. The goal of this work experience is not to produce the next generation of librarians, but rather, provide students with valuable experiences regardless of their career paths.

McIntyre Library Launches Book & Film Club

By Eric Jennings, jenninge@uwec.edu

McIntyre Library and the L.E. Phillips Memorial Public Library (LEMP) recently launched a book & film club, “UW Meets EC.” During January 2015, attendees read the book “Divergent” by Veronica Roth and discussed it over coffee and cookies in McIntyre Library. One week later the book & film club ate popcorn and watched the 2014 film adaptation starring Shailene Woodley at LEMP. Both libraries hope to continue this partnership this summer and fall. Information will be posted on the library’s blog (http://mcintyrenews.blogspot.com/) if you would like to participate.

Due to the success of UW Meets EC with library faculty and staff, McIntyre Library is looking to start a leisure reading book club for faculty and staff on campus. If you are interested in being part of a campus book club, contact Eric Jennings at 715-836-4076 or jenninge@uwec.edu.

student work experience by participating in the development of a series of campus workshops for student supervisors. Simultaneously, library staff are implementing practices to help students see the connections between their work experiences and their education and help them recognize and articulate more fully the value of those experiences. One student survey response effectively demonstrates how working in the library can be articulated in such a way to be compelling to any potential employer. This student talked about “being ok with not knowing what questions you will get asked when working, knowing where to look for answers, or being ok with asking for help. Overall being self-sufficient.” Knowingly or not, this student has identified a sweet spot where liberal education and work experience intersect.

The Excitement is Building for the New Honors Commons

By Ivy Gerbis, bohnleib@uwec.edu

The university Honors Program, which just celebrated its 30th anniversary, is experiencing a period of unprecedented growth and success. Over the past five years, Honors has developed into one of the university’s signature programs. In fall 2009 there were approximately 370 Honors students on record, and they could choose from 10 Honors colloquia and electives. In fall 2014 the program had 602 students on the books, and their options included 30 Honors courses.

This remarkable growth has put increased stress on the current Honors Program facilities in Schneider Hall. While students enjoy the cozy environment, it has become increasingly common to see students unable to find an open computer or even a space to sit and work. The time has come to graduate to a larger, more functional space—the new Honors Commons.

Honors Director Jeff Vahlbusch credits Director of Libraries John Pollitz with the “visionary suggestion” to bring Honors to the McIntyre Library. Creating a new Honors space in the library makes perfect sense, says Vahlbusch, because “the library is at the center of campus geography and at the center of campus intellectual life.” The Honors students agree, citing the many hours they already spend living in the library. The move will give them access to all of their essential resources in one place.

The new Honors Commons, on the second floor of the library, will have a design that fits seamlessly with its neighbor, the Center for Writing Excellence. It will provide a new center and focal point for activities in the Honors Program, and its open and inviting design will encourage students to use both the Honors and the library space. The student Commons space will be more than double the size of the current Honors lounge and will include moveable furniture designed to promote conversation and teamwork.

Vahlbusch explains, “The Honors Commons will give us a place for students to get to know each other, to build community, and to engage in collaborative intellectual and transformative social work.” The new space also will include Honors administrative and program offices and a workspace for Honors faculty to hold office hours and meet with their students. The new space will enable planned and chance meetings between students and faculty with unexpected and exciting outcomes.

The new Honors Commons will contribute to the energy and vitality of McIntyre Library’s already wonderful space, while also enabling Admissions to highlight the new facilities in their tours and outreach materials for prospective students. The university Honors Program is looking forward to a long and successful partnership with McIntyre Library!

When thinking about what I should write about in this semester’s offering, I had ruled out discussing the current proposed cuts to the UW System but these cuts are consuming almost every conversation in the library and across campus. In February I had the opportunity to participate in the Wisconsin Library Association’s (WLA) annual Library Legislative Day. I make a habit of going to these events so I can remind our elected officials how important libraries are to the lifeblood of our state. This year took on added significance because of the looming budget cuts and because of my role as President of WLA. This year we had 205 librarians walking the halls of the capitol bringing our message to legislators. There was some good news to be had that day. Governor Walker’s budget maintained funding for Badgerlink, the statewide collection of databases with free access for all Wisconsin citizens. The budget also maintains funding for the library systems which support public libraries around the state. We also carried the message that the proposed cuts to the UW System were too large, and we asked our legislators to work to mitigate the enormity of those cuts. Every legislator that I spoke with understands the importance of the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire to our region and the importance of the UW System to our state. It was clear that the efforts of Chancellor Schmidt had made an impression on both sides of the aisle. I left with a hope that things would be better by the time people read this issue of Off the Shelf.

There is more good news from McIntyre Library. In the fall issue I wrote that we established the McIntyre Library Student Employee Scholarship. Beginning next fall we will be awarding a $250 scholarship to one of our outstanding student employees. We sent out a call for donations last December and have already raised over $1,200. Many current and retired library staff rallied to our cause because they know how great our student employees are and how integral they are to our library services. We even had a few donations from our friends who had worked in the library when they worked here as undergraduates. We continue to accept donations through a convenient link available on the library homepage or from this secure URL, https://connect.uwec.edu/library.

I am also happy to report that the McIntyre Library Student Advisory Board began meeting regularly this fall. The students have had an immediate impact. On their advice we moved the location of our DVD collection to a more visible spot to increase the circulation of that collection. To update the DVD collection, we gave the board an allocation to purchase new popular movies. From all I hear the movies they bought are very popular. We can’t keep them on the shelves for more than a day.

Finally, we are in the process of remodeling the first floor of the library. We have had a small windfall because the UW System is temporarily paying for two important research databases. This gives us the opportunity to use one-time funds to make our facility more appealing and efficient for student research. The Student Government Information Technology Commission understood the need for new computer workstations and collaborative pods. They have pledged to match our funds. We hope to be able to show pictures of our renovated space in the fall issue of Off the Shelf.

While McIntyre Library is planning for budget reductions in our state funding in the upcoming biennial, we remain focused on student learning and student success. We will continue to innovate and strive to provide the best possible service to campus. We will continue to focus on making our space comfortable for students, providing valuable resources, and serving as a cornerstone to our students’ educational experience.
The journal Nature recently highlighted in its “News Blog” a study indicating that scientific output across the globe doubles every nine years or so. While the study they cite has significant caveats, “for the beleaguered academic, it all counts as more stuff to keep track of.” Sorting through such an enormous body of knowledge can feel like trying to clear an avalanche with a snow shovel, even with the help of powerful subscription databases.

One underutilized tool for helping researchers, faculty and others filter and track new information is RSS. Rich Site Summary or Really Simple Syndication, RSS was created at the turn of the millennium as a single format for syndicating content on the web. This format is known as a “feed,” a kind of document containing summaries or abbreviated descriptions to stories and other information, with links to the full version. One or more feeds can be organized for easy review using a feed aggregator. The most common aggregators are email readers (such as MS Outlook), web browsers, and specialized RSS feed reader software. These tools are simple to use and can effectively track a variety of different online information resources, including:

- News, weather and current events
- Blogs
- A journal’s table of contents
- Job boards

RSS feeds are also a great way to watch for new research publications, as many databases allow you to turn your searches into a feed. For a demonstration of how to use this resource, watch the YouTube video at http://bit.ly/155sDmC, contact the library at 715-836-3858 or library.reference@uwec.edu. We would be glad to help you set up RSS feeds to make tracking new and emerging research simpler and less time-consuming.

McIntyre Library Celebrates

20 Years of Giving

By Jill Markgraf, markgrjs@uwec.edu

For 20 years library faculty and staff have been buying rice for community members in need. Through an annual holiday giving project initiated and coordinated by the McIntyre Library Staff Association, a voluntary social organization comprised of library employees, the library has been raising funds to support those served by the Eau Claire Hmong Mutual Assistance Association (HMAA) rice pantry. This year’s efforts raised almost $1,300. Over the past 10 years—as long as records have been kept—almost $10,000 worth of rice has been purchased and distributed.

The project took root years ago when library staff decided that rather than exchange gifts with each other at the library’s annual holiday party, they would prefer to give gifts to people in need. Aware of the difficulties faced by many recent Hmong refugee families in the area, they decided to buy gifts and food for the HMAA. The HMAA is a social service agency that serves the local Hmong community by operating a rice pantry and assisting in housing, employment and translating services. The agency also works with other area services to assist the local Hmong community.

Over the years, it became clear that the biggest need was rice. The HMAA Rice Pantry provides Hmong families with their basic sustenance. As the library project focused on purchasing rice, others in the Eau Claire and university community got wind of the fundraiser, and asked if they could also contribute. The staff fundraiser was expanded, and it now accepts donations from all who are interested.

The project has matured in other ways in recent years, adding the option to donate online through the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire Foundation or deposit cash in a donation box in the library during November and December. What has not changed is that every penny donated buys rice. The HMAA estimates that a donation of $20 can feed a family of five for a month. This year’s annual fundraiser will begin in November.

For more information about the HMAA, visit http://www.ecahmaa.org. For information about the library giving project, visit http://libguides.uwec.edu/hmaagiving or contact Jill Markgraf at 715-836-5357 or markgrjs@uwec.edu.
