About the P.R.I.D.E.4Adults program

The intention of the P.R.I.D.E.4Adults program is to serve adults with disabilities ages 17+ years by providing them an individualized exercise program. The exercise program will consist of an aerobic, resistance training, and range of motion components. Overall, the evidence shows that exercise provides important health benefits for people with disabilities. The benefits include improved aerobic and muscle fitness, improved psychosocial health, and better ability to do tasks of daily life.

Individualized programming for each participant will be based on initial screening, interests, and referral information. Participants will receive individual/group instruction, attention, support, and encouragement from UWEC undergraduate students supervised by a university faculty member. The program will be suited for adults with a wide variety of ability levels.
