

Master of Arts in English - Literature and Textual Interpretation

The master of arts in English emphasizes the comprehensive study of literature in course work and specialized study in a thesis. It is designed for people who plan to teach in high school (already certified) or in college, to pursue careers requiring a high level of communication skills, or to pursue further graduate work in English or related fields.

The purposes of the MA degree are to:

- Introduce students to the ongoing professional conversations in English studies.
- Develop in students the ability to be articulate in writing and in oral discussions of their scholarly and creative work.
- Encourage students to have confidence in their individual responses to literature and to adopt other critical theories and perspectives when appropriate.
- Enable students to make appropriate use of a wide range of resources: works studied in courses and independent reading, as well as secondary and bibliographic materials.

Advanced courses in English emphasize literature viewed from a variety of theoretical perspectives and provide practical training in literary research and criticism. Other advanced courses focus on film, linguistics, scientific/technical and creative writing, and theories of pedagogy, writing and rhetoric.
