Since the COVID-19 outbreak began spreading globally, anti-Asian prejudice and xenophobia has become increasingly visible. Misinformation and painful stereotypes imply incorrectly that Asian American communities are the agents of the contagion. This panel will discuss different lenses through which this phenomenon is taking place. Panelists will discuss how the national narrative of anti-Asian racism has impacted their respective agencies, how different institutions are addressing the situation, and they will share recommendations about how organizations can work collectively to support community members immediately impacted by these racist and xenophobic acts.

Panel Discussion: Responding to Anti-Asian Racism During the COVID-19 Pandemic
