This presentation takes a social identity approach to understanding health behaviors, examining the association between identification with all of humanity and behaviors that reduce the risk of contracting, transmitting, or causing harm to others during the COVID-19 pandemic. Results using a sample of adults from across the United States will be shared, including the extent to which identification with all humanity uniquely predicts one's (1) attempt to influence others to adhere to COVID-19 guidelines, (2) social distancing, (3) mask wearing, and (4) overbuying or "hoarding" of goods.
